AMIC SEMINAR ON MEDIA AND GOOD GOVERNANCE, LOAS, Nov 10-12, 1999
The promotion of good governance is not simply the function of the state. The private sector and civil society have an equally important role. So does the mass media with its reach and power to influence the public. Through its reporting, monitoring and analyzing current issues and events, mass media can create an environment attractive to good governance. How has mass media fostered effective, transparent, accountable and responsible government institution? How has mass media helped promote the rule of law? These are but a few questions discussed during the seminar.
