About AMIC
The Asian Media Information and Communication Center (AMIC) is a major resource for communicators in the Asia-Pacific. It serves as a clearing house of information, an initiator and implementor of research activities, a publishing house specializing in communication issues and a focal point for communication scholars and practitioners to exchange ideas and experiences, as well as to plan and work for the future.

AMIC, a non-profit, non-governmental foundation, was launched in 1971 with the support of the Government of Singapore and Friedrich-Ebert Stiftung, an independent foundation in the Federal Republic of Germany. It is a membership organization attracting media practitioners and communication specialists and institutions from 48 countries worldwide.

AMIC Library
AMIC acts as a catalyst for effective communication and socio-economic development in the region. It cooperates with governments and national bodies as well as international organizations like UNESCO, which has accorded it the status of "NGO in formal consultative relations with UNESCO," giving it direct access to the world body. AMIC is actively engaged in mass communications documentation, research, training, publishing and mass media project consultancy.

AMIC Publications
As a publishing house specializing in communication, AMIC publishes periodicals, books and selected papers. Some of these are:
- Asian Communication Handbook
- Asian Values in Journalism
- Asian Women in the Information Age
- Communication Development and Human Rights in Asia
- Communications Research in Asia
- Media Education: A Teaching Manual
- Media Monitor in Asia
- Role of Media in a National Crisis
- TV Without Borders
The impact of the recent financial crisis and deepening poverty in Asia have both predicted and unforeseen consequences in terms of human rights. Mass layoffs, food shortages, continued community-related violence and abuses linked to armed conflict and civil strife are but a few of these consequences. The rural poor in the region are most vulnerable. They are powerless to safeguard and pursue their human rights due to poverty, exploitation and remoteness. Many have neither knowledge nor awareness of their legal rights. Access to legal remedies is hard to come by, thus their difficulty to protect their rights.

Mass media have a critical role to play in addressing human rights issues that affect the rural poor. It is a difficult role in the context of the Asian concept of human rights of seeking a correct balance between the right of the individual to exercise his free will and the good of the community. By gathering, analyzing and transmitting information using text and audio-visuals, mass media can assist in safeguarding their human rights, educating them about these rights, reporting violations and facilitating legal remedies, and assisting the rural poor assert their human rights.

UNESCO has recognized this vital link between media and human rights in its "Declaration on Fundamental Principles concerning the Contribution of the Mass Media to Strengthening Peace and International Understanding, to the Promotion of Human Rights and to Countering Racism, Apartheid and Incitement to War," the UN-attached agency declared that the promotion of human rights demands a free flow and a wider and better balanced dissemination of information, and to this end, mass media have a leading contribution to make.

The proposed conference is a follow-up activity to the AMIC-organized seminar on Communication Development and Human Rights in Asia held in Bandung, Indonesia on May 9-11, 1988. This was supported by the Institute of Social Studies (ISS), Netherlands, Swedish International Development Authority (SIDA) and the Nederlandse Organisatie voor Internationale Ontwikkelingsaanwering (NOVIB).

Objectives

To increase journalists' awareness and understanding of human rights issues that impact on the rural poor of Asia

To examine how media practitioners and institutions can meet the challenges and exploit the opportunities arising out of developments on human rights in the region

To identify guidelines and measures that can assist media in improving coverage of human rights issues affecting the rural poor in Asia

To provide a forum for knowledge sharing and networking among communication professionals, human rights activities and lawyers and academicians

Who Will Attend?

Senior media practitioners, human rights activists, civil rights attorneys and academicians from 10 Asian countries, namely, Thailand, Philippines, Malaysia, Indonesia, India, Pakistan, Bangladesh, Sri Lanka, Cambodia and Vietnam

Format

The three-day conference features country presentations of the state of Media and Human Rights in Asian countries, discussions among participants and resources persons of the various issues involved in media and human rights and the generation of a list of recommendations on how media can effectively assist in human rights.
